

A THOUGHT EXPERIMENT

NO. 01

What if Hermès asked us to build a wellness room in India?

Here is how we would go about it, room by room.

A speculative concept. Not commissioned by or affiliated with Hermès.

WHERE WE WOULD START

Not a pop-up. Not a logo on a wall.

The house began in Paris in 1837, making harnesses for horses. Almost two centuries on, one artisan still makes a bag from start to finish, by hand.

So the room cannot be fast. It has to move at the speed of a hand.

CODE ONE	CODE TWO	CODE THREE
The horse	The hand	Time

BUILT ON ONE STITCH

The saddle stitch: two needles, one thread, pulled tight from both sides. Slower than a machine, and it outlasts one.

We would build the whole evening on that rhythm. In, and out. Breath, and heat. Two sides of one thread.

The Saddle Stitch

A 90-MINUTE RITUAL · THREE ROOMS · 24 GUESTS AN EVENING

THE SALT ROOM

Breathe, in a room of salt.

Walls of rock salt, lit from behind. A floor of salt from the Rann of Kutch, raked by hand between sessions into the pattern of a printed scarf. Guided breathwork, lying down, in near silence.

The silk is not on display. It is folded under each guest's head.

THE MANÈGE

Heat, in the round.

A manège is the round arena where a horse is schooled. So the heat room is round too: tiered cedar, no front row, everyone facing the centre.

Every eight minutes, steam is poured over vetiver, the Indian khus root, and the whole room breathes out together.

THE UNHURRIED HOUR

Rest, and nothing to buy.

A low, quiet room. Guests are wrapped in silk after the heat, handed cold tulsi and a slow cup of kahwa, and left alone. No counter, no catalogue, no one selling.

The product is in every room and sold in none of them.

The house already proved this abroad, with a gym where the scarves were the equipment.

ROOTED, NOT IMPORTED

Paris codes. Indian materials.

THE FLOOR

Salt

From the Rann of Kutch, Gujarat.

THE BENCHES

Cedar

Deodar, the cedar of the Himalaya.

THE STEAM

Vetiver

Khus, used to cool rooms across north India.

THE HORSE

Marwari

The curled-ear horse of Rajasthan, in the film.

A Paris house should feel at home here, not on a visit.

From first call to first evening.

01 Listen
Time inside the house's codes, with its team in India and in Paris.

02 Translate
Materials, scent, sound and pace, sourced here.

03 Build
One room, designed and run by one team, end to end.

04 Invite
24 guests an evening. The house writes the list.

05 Film
Stills and film shot on the day, for the house's channels.

06 Return
A monsoon edition in Mumbai. A winter one in Delhi.

THE POINT OF ALL OF IT

Not an event. A format.

i. A ritual with a name, ready to run again.

ii. A guest list it wrote, and keeps.

iii. A film of the evening,
for its own channels.

The room closes at ten.
The relationship doesn't.

This one is imagined. Yours doesn't have to be.

We design and run owned wellness experiences for luxury brands in India.
